Thank you Nelson,

I was expecting this to be an apology to Carlos, but I was mistaken. I'm a little disappointed, but I guess that happens from time to time. I maintain that we should not be talking about people - if we have a problem with them we should engage them in meaningful dialogue.

For clarification - regarding people having their reasons for asking for privacy - I prefer to not make assumptions that someone's request is of more value than my own view. I don't follow anything or anyone blindly. Regarding my sharing of information with some people and not others - it was based on me being involved in an email thread to which I was party to conversation in which people were sharing a set of misunderstandings. I have already explained this, and pointed out that my intention was to provide clarification. If the same thing happens on other platforms I will likely respond likewise - with clarification. I have not decided to share with some and not others - I have shared with those who demonstrated that clarification was needed.

Regarding point #3 - I am disappointed to see a demonstration of quote-mining (only one of which is my own words), from TZM AU's collaborative planning platform, to support a tenuously connected inference to TZM AU's "support for a certain direction". If any one would like to know my position, or David's, or any one else in the TZM AU chapter, you are most welcome to ask. I have made some points clear in my previous email this evening. You have made use of our transparency to find information that you have presented out of context - this is not what transparency is intended for and I expect to at least be asked some questions before having my "views" stated for me. I think it would be more valuable to simply discuss our views in a respectful and open-minded manner, with questions asked, rather than inferences projected. As I am keen to maintain transparency there is no question you can ask me that I will not answer honestly.

Thank you,
K McGregor

This is not about you my friend, but the system of communication itself, we created a closed google group to prevent this kind of things (perhaps?) anyway it seems some info is going out of the team. Who should we ask this about?
